Hidden Talents of NJMC Staff to Be Revealed at Flyway Gallery

LYNDHURST, N.J. – The New Jersey Meadowlands Commission will offer a unique perspective on the Meadowlands District this September from the planners, engineers, naturalists, accountants, administrative and other professionals who work at the NJMC each day.

“We appreciate the personal interest our staff takes in the Meadowlands District, many often returning in their off-hours to capture its natural beauty, historical features, and people,” said NJMC Commissioner Leonard Kaiser. “In addition to their professionalism, they’ve demonstrated impressive skills as amateur artists.”

The fourth Employee Art Exhibit at the Flyway Gallery of the Meadowlands Environment Center, from Sept. 5 through 28, will include photographs, paintings and other media. Admission is free.

Previous employee shows have seen close-ups of tree swallows feeding their young in nest boxes, misty fall mornings at DeKorte Park in Lyndhurst, and views of the New Jersey Turnpike’s Eastern spur, Lower Hackensack River Lift Bridge and other man-made structures from the rare vantage point of the river.

The Meadowlands Environment Center was established by the NJMC to provide space for artists living in, and inspired by, the Meadowlands region. The Gallery is open to the public from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday, and 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Saturday and Sunday. For more information, log onto www.njmeadowlands.gov.
